

APOLOGY LETTER

APRIL 12, 2024

TO

Dear Sanskruti

I hope you're doing okay. I want to apologize for bothering you so much lately. I realize now I went too far with all my messages, especially the ones about my day when you didn't ask. I didn't mean to annoy you or make you uncomfortable.

I understand now that you need your space, and I should've respected that. I thought I was being caring, but I see how it could've come across as irritating. I'm really sorry about that.

The number of messages increased because I've noticed a sudden change in your behavior, and it worried me. Your silence made me anxious, and I kept wondering if everything was okay with you. I should have asked sooner instead of bombarding you with messages.

As they say, "A true friend is someone who knows when you're sad, even when you're pretending to be happy for everyone else." I want you to know that caring about you isn't something I find irritating—it's a privilege.

Besides, who else will I annoy with my endless rants and weird jokes if not my bestie? You're the peanut butter to my jelly, the cheese to my macaroni, and the weirdo to my weirdness!

The truth is, your friendship means a lot to me, and I don't want to mess that up. I promise I'll be more mindful of your boundaries from now on and try not to bother you.

I hope you can find it in your heart to forgive me. I miss our fun chats and don't want things to be weird between us.

Thanks for being awesome!

Yours (irritating friend) Sincerely,
AZAM SHAIKH
